Market Overview

- NZ bond market yields moved higher and the curve steepened during October.
- Market sentiment has become less negative with some positives emerging regarding improved economic data.
- The pricing in of further interest rate cuts has been reduced as a consequence.

Fund Highlights

- The fund underperformed benchmark, although NZ bond returns were generally negative as yields moved higher over the month. Credit margins stabilised on supply/demand dynamics.
- A higher portfolio yield through holding quality credit should continue to benefit the fund.

Market Commentary

The returns from NZ bonds were generally negative over October as interest rates moved higher in yield following an improvement in market sentiment. With optimism that US/China trade negotiations may be improving and improved economic data there was some unwind of the negatives that were priced into bond yield curves for slower growth and further interest rates cuts. There has been quite a change in sentiment from market concern around the possibility of very low or negative cash rates in NZ to now only pricing one further interest rate cut of 25 basis points.

Certainly there have been some reasonably large moves in interest rates over the past couple of months, with more volatility in longer maturity bonds as they have followed offshore rates higher, while short maturities have remained more anchored by low cash rates. Over the month medium to longer maturity bonds performed worse than short maturities. The 2021 NZ Government bond finished the month 7 basis points higher in yield, whereas the 2025 maturity increased by 13 basis points, and maturities 10 years and longer were up to 25 basis points higher in yield by month end. Funds with longer duration positions underperformed those with less exposure to rising interest rates.

On a sector basis NZ Government bonds performed poorly as buyers have been absent as yields moved higher. Shorter swap maturities narrowed in spread relative to similar maturities of government bonds and the longer maturities widened slightly. Credit performed reasonably well as the supply overhang of secondary bonds seems to have been readily absorbed by the market. If supply remains limited we would expect credit spreads to unwind the widening seen in the previous month.

With the move higher in yields we have opportunistically added some bonds to the fund. While growth is below potential and inflation low, it seems likely shorter term NZ interest rates will remain low for some time. With little slope or yield pickup along the government and swap yield curve we still like investing in credit to achieve a higher portfolio yield.

Fund Commentary

The fund underperformed the Bloomberg NZ Bond Credit benchmark over the month. A longer duration positioning, and some of the fund's longer maturity bonds detracted value as the yield curve steepened in shape.

We will focus on maintaining a higher portfolio yield through buying quality non-government bond issues. We believe there are still some good opportunities to pick up yield through selling short to maturity bonds and investing longer in maturity along the credit curve.
