Market Commentary

The returns from NZ bonds were again strong over the month as interest rates continued to move lower in yield. The positive contribution from duration has been the primary driver of returns as bond yields have fallen significantly since the start of the year. Funds with longer duration positions and more exposure to the direction of interest rates had a surprisingly strong start to the year.

The financial markets sentiment remains negative and has been polarised by concern over the coronavirus and what impact that could have on economic activity and world growth. There is currently a lot of negative news priced into bond markets as sentiment dominates reason. It would however be fair to say there remains considerable uncertainty about what the impact of the virus will be, and in a “risk off” environment investors generally buy bonds pushing yields lower. The NZ 10-year bond is close to records lows, and the US 10-year bond which is generally viewed as “a bellwether of global risk appetite” has plummeted to new record lows in yield. There has also been a major change priced into the front end of yield curves. Previously expectations were that central banks would keep rates on hold and the market has now switched to pricing aggressive interest rate cuts. Although we think there has been some market overreaction and bonds have perhaps become expensive we recognise markets can overshoot. In general we remain positioned longer duration than benchmark across our bond funds.

Over the month the decline in yields along the NZ government bond curve was fairly consistent with both short and longer maturities finishing around 25 basis points (bps) lower. On a sector basis NZ Government bonds were the best performing sector as yields fell in a flight to quality move. The swap curve moved in line with governments. Credit holdings underperformed as credit margins widened marginally in the “risk off” environment. We find it difficult to be overly negative on credit as the supply/demand fundamentals remain supportive with limited supply versus upcoming maturities.

Interest rate markets have had a volatile start to the year and we would expect what happens in our major trading partners to have a significant impact here in NZ. Longer term bond rates will likely continue to be more influenced by the direction of offshore bonds. Short term rates are expected to fall as there is a considerable expectation that the Reserve Bank and/or Government should provide support to the economy and those sectors that are impacted by the virus and cash flow crunch.

Fund Commentary

The fund outperformed its benchmark by 25bps over the month. The longer duration positioning and yield curve positioning were the main contributors to outperformance. Credit in general underperformed similar maturities of government bonds and swap rates as margins widened slightly. We will continue to focus on maintaining a higher portfolio yield through buying quality non-government bond issues. Medium term we expect credit to remain well supported with a shortage of supply to market.
