

NIKKO AM CONSERVATIVE STRATEGY

Assets are held in the Nikko AM Wholesale NZ Conservative Fund. The Nikko AM Conservative Fund (retail) and Nikko AM KiwiSaver Scheme Conservative Fund invest in units in the wholesale fund, which the commentary refers to.

Market Overview

- During October, equity markets around the world fell for a variety of reasons, but general negativity around the deterioration of progress out of the COVID-19 disruption was the key driver.
- The NZ equity market was an outlier and rose significantly (nearly 3% for the NZX50 and almost 6% for the listed property index.)
- Bond yields rose at the long end, but fell at the short end as investors expected that longer-term growth prospects were likely improving.

Fund Highlights

- The fund returned 0.55% for the month, well ahead of the benchmark and continues to deliver above the longer-term expected return.

Market Commentary

During October, equity markets around the world fell back for a variety of reasons, but general negativity around the deterioration of progress out of the COVID-19 disruption was the key driver. Accordingly, it was perhaps not surprising that the NZ equity market was an outlier and rose significantly (nearly 3% for the NZX50 and almost 6% for the listed property index). Bond yields rose at the long end, but fell at the short end (i.e. the curve ‘steepened’) as investors expected that longer-term growth prospects were likely improving, but noting that central banks continued to emphasise the likely need for more monetary policy action in lowering rates in the near term. Investors continue to wrestle with the seemingly intractable problem that arises from low interest rates whereby yields from fixed income securities are materially lower than desired return objectives, but investing in higher yielding equity type securities comes with the risk of higher volatility and potentially larger losses in a downturn. It is worth noting that going forward lower expected returns overall are a feature of this environment, and that despite the lower yields from fixed income, they still offer the benefit of downside protection within a portfolio. In addition, our philosophy of using ‘alternative’ market sectors to help enhance total portfolio return and provide diversification from both bonds and equities remains firmly in place.

Fund Commentary

The strategy returned 0.55% for the month, well ahead of benchmark. Within the sector level funds that are used to build the fund, there was general outperformance, especially within global equities which helped to mitigate the broader market losses. Currency markets were largely flat for the month of October as a whole resulting in hedged and unhedged performance being broadly similar. Putting these different elements together, the net effect for investors was a generally solid performance for the month with the fund outperforming its benchmark and being above the longer-term expected return.
