Market Commentary

September finished a tough quarter for investment returns, ironically a more resilient economic backdrop hasn't been helpful as inflation concerns remain elevated which in turn keeps pressure on interest rates. On the inflation front steeper supply curves particularly a resurgence in oil prices have also been unhelpful. Equity markets started the quarter on a positive note but suffered negative returns in both August and September as sentiment soured with a shift in focus to rising cost pressures challenging profitability, weakening demand, and higher borrowing costs which resulted in a broad market decline which proved difficult to avoid. Bond returns were negative as moves higher in interest rates resulted in capital losses negating the positive income accrual from fixed income. The re-pricing of higher cash rates for longer and increased supply of government bond issuance weighed heavily on bond markets both here and offshore and yield curves are now a lot higher and flatter in slope. A positive is that cash and bonds look a lot more attractive as an investment, but this isn't helpful for equities when comparing forward earnings versus the higher yield to maturity on cash and bond funds. An improving inflation profile remains the key to lower rates but if economies and consumers remain more resilient it looks likely we will have to wait longer for validation. In general, risk appetite has taken a backwards step with market liquidity much lower as investors reassess. The markets want to move forward but there is a surprising degree of uncertainty as to the evolution of economies and inflation especially considering we are arguably close to the terminal peak in cash rates. Even though assets prices have cheapened investors may be following the mantra of central banks which is to wait, watch and worry until they have more conviction regarding where to from here?

Fund Commentary

The fund performance was disappointing in terms of absolute return and relative returns for the September quarter with both equities and bonds struggling with the interest rates needing to be higher for longer theme. NZ bonds and global bonds had a reasonable month in July but the rise in yields was the main driver of negative returns in the following two months. Credit holdings have performed better than lower yielding government bonds on a sector basis with margins stable to slightly narrower. Government bonds underperformed due to an increased supply profile as deteriorating government fiscal positions need to be funded. ARK had a good start to the quarter but gave back their strong performance, however this remained in context of what we would expect from the fund during a broad equity market decline. On a positive note, ARK's top contributors were Archer Aviation (ACHR), Nvidia (NVDA) and Spotify (SPOT). The NZ dollar depreciated by around 2% over the quarter in line with risk-off sentiment and a stronger US dollar. The Multi Manager, NZ equity and global shares sectors also suffered the fate of the wider market delivering negative returns. The global shares managers commented "we are continuing to improve our portfolio's weather-proofing by adding companies with a proven track record of delivering good growth and returns, even when the economic cycle is less in their favour". They expect that spending on energy infrastructure will remain a real imperative for many countries in the coming years. Our investments in this area (including Worley Limited, Schlumberger Limited and ChampionX Corporation) have enjoyed improving relative performance in recent months and we expect this to continue in the future. Unfortunately returns were disappointing over the quarter, but the fund remains well diversified and the Managers are cognisant of delivering performance over the medium term.
