Commentary

Movements in New Zealand interest rates were relatively modest during April. The New Zealand yield curve flattened as short maturity bonds moved higher in yield while maturities 5 years and longer finished lower in yield. The spread between the 2 year and 10 year swap rates finished the month at 73 basis points. Swap rates moved in the same direction as government bonds but longer maturity swaps underperformed widening in spread as they failed to rally to the same extent as similar maturities of Governments. There has been a reasonable amount of interest in New Zealand assets with yields remaining high relative to other developed economies and the currency showing some stability.

New Zealand short term rates ticked higher in yield at month end. The RBNZ left the Official Cash Rate unchanged, and gave no sense that they are in any hurry to cut rates any lower than 2%, leaving the market with the possibility of one further 25 basis point cut. The RBNZ's commentary was generally viewed as more hawkish than expected. The RBNZ is still positive regarding the domestic economy's prospects; strong inward migration, construction activity, and tourism with accommodative monetary policy supporting the economy. Areas of concern are Auckland house price growth which has picked up of late and market pressures spilling over to other regions, and dairy export prices remaining below breakeven for most farmers. The RBNZ remains cautious about global prospects noting "global growth has deteriorated over recent months", with China again singled out. It continues to highlight concern over lower inflation expectations, and was a little more direct in its language towards currency. The currency has been stubbornly strong as interest rate expectations have also fallen in other countries, which has weakened their currencies relative to the New Zealand dollar and it is unlikely this will unwind soon.

A positive for the month has been that credit margins stabilised and narrowed slightly after being a negative contributor in the March quarter. Resultantly, returns from credit holdings have generally outperformed government and swap investments. We have been extending the duration of the Fund's credit holdings at these wider margin levels. There are a reasonable number of bond maturities this year and these monies will likely be recycled into bonds further along the yield curve looking for a higher return. Although credit markets have been challenging, we are not overly negative and expect that although credit margins may expand further they will likely peak this year. Predicting the exact timing of the peak or troughs in a cycle is difficult and we will be incrementally extending duration to take advantage of higher credit margins. Our investment horizon is the medium to long term and we continue to expect credit to add value over low yielding government and swap investments. Higher yields should ultimately benefit the Fund as bonds roll down the yield curve and move lower in yield as they become closer to maturity.
